PREFACE.

The Author of this work, having for many years been engaged in making out Bills of Costs for offices of the first respectability, had selected the following pages more with a view to his own convenience than for publication; but some of his private friends, having seen minutes of the work, have requested him to publish it for the use of the profession, which, he trusts, will not be unacceptable.

From the nature of the subject, a work of this sort must necessarily require some few alterations, but it has been the Author's study to bring it as near the standard of the day as possible; and he will venture to assure the profession, that the greatest care and attention has been bestowed to render it as complete as possible. Although the Author has bestowed much time in collecting and arranging his materials, so as to make his work of utility, yet he is not so confident as to assert that no errors or inaccuracies may not be found; but whatever they are, he trusts the profession will be indulgent enough to excuse.
